Uma LLP regida pelo Limited Liability Partnerships Act 2005 é uma pessoa jurídica cujos sócios não respondem pessoalmente por suas obrigações além de sua contribuição. É tributada de forma transparente, de modo que cada sócio é tributado sobre sua parcela da renda.[1] Deve ter pelo menos dois sócios e um gerente (manager) com residência habitual em Singapura.[2] Para um grupo de traders ou consultores que queira reunir capital sem uma camada societária, e cuja renda seria de qualquer forma tributada no nível individual, a LLP é eficiente. É inadequada para tudo o que exija licença, porque a MAS (Monetary Authority of Singapore) licencia sociedades. Também é inadequada como veículo de participações, porque a transparência repassa aos sócios, a cada ano, todos os ganhos e perdas. Na minha experiência, a LLP foi usada sobretudo por equipes de negociação por conta própria no período de 2020 a 2022 e cedeu amplamente lugar à Pte. Ltd., combinada com uma VCC para o capital agrupado.
