Singapura diversificou seu polo de trading para além do petróleo, abrangendo gás natural liquefeito, metais, commodities agrícolas e créditos de carbono, em cada caso com o apoio de medidas específicas do Estado. No GNL, um terminal de importação inaugurado em 2013, um incentivo fiscal e uma comunidade de mais de 60 empresas fizeram da cidade um centro do comércio asiático de gás, embora o principal benchmark spot seja apurado por uma agência de informação de preços e o setor elétrico doméstico compre seu gás por meio da Singapore GasCo desde setembro de 2025. Nos metais, Singapura atua como centro de formação de preços, compensação e financiamento, graças à posição de liderança da SGX nos swaps de minério de ferro, à armazenagem de metais básicos e a um setor de metais preciosos apoiado por uma isenção de GST desde 2012. Nas commodities agrícolas, Wilmar, Olam e Golden Agri-Resources fazem de Singapura a sede de grande parte do comércio de óleo de palma e softs, que o Transboundary Haze Pollution Act 2014, os compromissos privados de desmatamento zero e o Regulamento da UE sobre o desmatamento submeteram a exigentes requisitos de rastreabilidade. No carbono, um imposto que admite créditos internacionais para até 5% das emissões tributáveis
